Abstract

This study aims to shed light on Combating Functional Corruption in the Balance of Islamic Law and Legislation and Its Impact on Intellectual Security by addressing the phenomenon comprehensively, integrating both religious and legal perspectives, and examining its implications for enhancing intellectual security. The thesis is structured into four chapters:

The first chapter explores the concept of functional corruption, defining it, analyzing its causes, dimensions, and negative effects on institutions and society, while highlighting its ethical and social consequences.

The second chapter focuses on intellectual security as a cornerstone of societal stability. It reviews the concept, its significance, and its role in confronting intellectual challenges that threaten social harmony.

The third chapter examines combating functional corruption in light of Islamic law, presenting the relevant Quranic verses and Prophetic traditions that emphasize integrity, justice, and the prohibition of all forms of corruption.

The fourth chapter discusses combating functional corruption in light of legislation, reviewing laws and regulations designed to curb this phenomenon and enforce deterrent penalties against offenders. Furthermore, this chapter analyzes the impact of combating functional corruption on enhancing intellectual security, demonstrating that reducing corruption fosters a secure and stable intellectual environment built on trust and justice.

The study concludes that combating functional corruption is both a religious and legal necessity for achieving intellectual security. Eliminating this phenomenon plays a pivotal role in safeguarding societal values and promoting stability and harmony within the community.
