Abstract

The Arabic language still occupies a high position in the hearts of its speakers and students, and it is the bearer of Islamic civilization, and it is one of the most widespread languages in the world, and it is the language of the Noble Qur'an, and it contains the vocabulary that the reader is eager to know and expand on, as well as this language has its rules and literature, and it is considered one of the human languages. It still preserves its grammatical and linguistic history, and this language has linguistic specificity, which is what made it distinguished from other languages, and these dialects arose from the womb of the generous Arabic language, which had a great impact in most of the books, whether linguistic letters, dictionaries, readings, and grammar books, As well as its leading role in morphology, sound and connotation.

For the sake of a deeper understanding of this language, my desire was directed to a grammatical study represented by dialects and the title of the thesis was (Arabic dialects in Abbas Hassan's grammar book). My honorable professor, Dr. Amin Al-Habbar, had the credit for choosing the topic, and after reading and researching some sources, I saw that this topic Suitable for study, and after that he directed me to several sources and refere The study required that it be divided into an introduction, four chapters and a conclusion.

In the preface, the researcher dealt with the definition of a language and a dialect as a language and idiomatically, the relationship between them, and the reasons for the emergence of dialects.

The first chapter: Study of the syntactic signs: It contains the missing noun, the six nouns, and the double, the noun and the muthanna vowel, the syntactic syntax and the metaphoric syntax, and the appendix to the plural of the masculine masculine, the missing noun, the plural of the peaceful feminine, the defective verb and the appending of the verb attributed to a double or plural .nces to use them in building a plan based on this study. And the second chapter came: to talk about the buildings and to clarify the dialects in that: It contains (the pronoun I, the movement of the absent E, and the omission of the group Waw), the nouns of the sign (that, and here), the related nouns (the lat, the any, the two, the two) and the verb nouns (so on, And the hayat) and the conditions (plastic, and with).

As for the third chapter, regarding tools and their work:

First / In raising: (not and what).

Second / In the accusative: (excluded by (except) the complete exile, and the abolition and action in the actions of the heart

And the designation of (if) and (that) mitigated between negligence and negligence, and permission between verification and negligence, and accusation with (not) the accusative and neglected, and the procedure of saying the course of conjecture, and (that) the source, and (perhaps) attributed to the speaker J

Third / In traction (and traction with perhaps and when

Fourth / In asserting (not) and (if)

As for the fourth chapter, it includes separate grammatical topics, name The caller added to the speaker J, the caller almukhm, the deletion of the tanween, the forbidden from the conjugation (the scientific with the ajma), the added complex number, and the connection of the Ta with
